Seasonal allergies, asthma, lower back pain, stomach/intestinal distress, chronic headaches, depression, negative thought patterns

Life doesn't always go the way you anticipate it will. Neither does marriage. "In sickness and health" took on a new meaning when 911 hit, and the ensuing ripple effect on the economy, jobs and business decisions. There had been conflict in my marriage before this point, but loss of jobs and financial challenges brought our family into a new foray of illness – and we began trying to deal with the situation by talking with doctors, counselors and medicines. Even though we are Christians, and know how Christ wants us to love and care for each other – years of dealing with "issues" had taken its toll. This situation affected not only husband and wife but children and the environment of our whole home in addition to our entire outlook on life and outside relationships. A good friend had told us repeatedly about a new healing ministry she was involved with. We are from a "mainstream" religion, and quite honestly, this new approach to getting better sounded unusual. But, by the time she mentioned it a 4th or 5th time – we saw the retreat as a last-ditch effort. At the very least, how bad could it be to be around a bunch of Christians praising God for a week?

My husband went to conference, begrudgingly, and received tremendous healing in his spirit in addition to physical healing of his mind and body. He seemed a changed man, but it was hard to trust that change could be as easy as going to a conference and applying the principles learned there. Future conferences came, and our friend kept after some of our other friends as well, and they went – feeling like we did that "what could it hurt?" They ended the conference having similar results – turnaround of marriage relationships, healing of deep wounds, release from alcoholism, a friend who came to the conference with a cane for MS got up from dinner at a restaurant on Sunday night and forgot to bring her cane with her to exit the restaurant. These weren't religious lunatics – these people were my friends from a mainline church who I have known for years and they were getting better as well. At times it was almost too much to believe.

In time, I began to see that the healing wasn't a quick-fix, but a long-term change that had happened in my own family as well. My husband is a changed man. Our relationship is healing. Joy is returning to our home. And, because he is on a pathway to wellness, it has allowed me the freedom now to focus on my own personal healing through God and the Restored Lives International conference as well. Our lives have been so changed through the approach that we have taken other family members to the conference as well. It is a process – we have had some instant healing and are working through some other things through tools we were taught at the conference. But, the tools are Bible-based. We were not asked to stop seeing our doctors or stop going to our regular church. God is becoming more real to us as we see his desire for health of our bodies and health in our relationship with Him. The people involved with the ministry have example after example of people whose lives have been totally transformed through this ministry. They continue to be involved with future seminars and are kind and caring.

What “issues” have members of my family been healed from? Negative thought patterns have been reversed; seasonal allergies are all but gone in our family; depression has been lifted; chronic lower back pain has been removed; chronic headaches are all but gone; asthma symptoms have been gone for one year (and counting); chronic stomach/intestinal problems are healing. We are seeing improvement in other areas of our life as well – especially in terms of relationship healing and the assurance of God’s perfect plan for our life!

If you had told me 5 years ago that we would be at the place we are now in my marriage and family – I would not have even believed it could be possible. But, so amazing is the power of God. Do not be afraid to take a chance and devote the time to this conference. What do you have to lose if all you get is a week of praising God with a bunch of other Christians? But, what if you received even more than that? The possibilities are endless. The ball is in your court!
